Mum's illness led to man killing himself

A MAN shot himself in the head because he was disturbed by his mother's long illness and his own ill-health, an inquest was told.

Leslie Albert Knott, 52, of Grange Close, Newbold Verdon, died of a shotgun wound at his home on December 28.

Mr Knott's wife of 20 years, Gillian Knott, told the inquest at Coalville Magistrates Court that her husband was troubled by his mother's illness and his own health problems which prevented him from working.

On the night of his death he secretly unlocked a gun cabinet in their bedroom and shot himself, the court heard.

A post-mortem examination carried out found alcohol in Mr Knott's system.

Mrs Knott told the inquest that the couple had experienced no more domestic problems than any other couple but that her husband had become increasingly distraught about his mother, his ill-health and his use of alcohol.

Recording a verdict of suicide, North Leicestershire Coroner Philip Tomlinson said: "The means by which Mr Knott met his death was clearly a gun shot wound to his head.

"On that evening he had been upset and had shown emotion."

Mr Tomlinson added: "I am satisfied that he went up to his bedroom, inserted the gun in his mouth knowing the consequences of what he was doing."

Shotgun death

A MAN who was depressed about his mother's ill-health shot himself, an inquest heard.

Mr Leslie Albert Knott (52), of Grange Close, Newbold Verdon, died from a shotgun wound to the head on December 28, 1996.

His wife for 20 years, Mrs Gillian Knott, told an inquest her husband was concerned about his ill mother, who died the following day, and his own decreasing health. He was suffering with arthritis.

Mr Knott kept a shotgun in a locked cabinet in their bedroom and moments later she heard a noise.

North Leicestershire coroner Mr Philip Tomlinson recorded a verdict of suicide.
