HB/21/02: GEORGE & DRAGON INN, Dragon Lane

[www.leicestershirevillages/newboldverdon] In the late 60's mining subsidence caused the 'dip' at the end of Dragon Lane and the old George and Dragon, along with some houses opposite, were demolished due to the damage. The pub was rebuilt and named 'The Dragon'. The houses across the road were also rebuilt. 'The Dragon' remained till the early 1990's. The Newbold Verdon medical centre occupies the site at present.

1970 rebuilt [Leicester Mercury 29 June 2009] This pub, cunningly disguised as an electricity sub-station, opened in 1970, after the original pub on the site fell victim to mining subsidence. Once, due to fractured pipes, steam showered from the bar ceiling, appropriately like a fire-breathing dragon.
1990s closed

HB/21/11: SWAN, 22 Main Street (Old Swan)

[Leicester Mercury 8 April 2016] Chris Ward and Claire Skinner, licensees {for just over 6 months} at The Swan, in Newbold Verdon, are toasting the milestone {200th birthday} on 23 April. In the early years of the 19th century, the pub was known as The Swan. Since then, it has been known, at various times, as the Swan, the Swan Inn and the Old Swan. In 2014, Everards changed the name back to the orginal The Swan to the delight of many locals. Back in 1816, the publican was Richard Flamson, who lived in the cottage and ran it as a pub until 1826. Over the years, The Swan has served a number of public roles, from the travelling magistrate's court, parish council meeting place and occasional auction house. The very far end of today's pub was once a butcher's and the opposite end was the village lock-up.

1791 [Leicester Journal 15 April 1791] To be sold at the Swan Inn, Newbold Verdon, a violoncello, a bassoon, a hautboy, and a german flute, with instruction books
