Description of remains, precise location and stratification (attach plans if necessary)

This field had been ploughed this year for the first time since the Newbold Verdon Group was formed; as it was adjacent to the scatter of Romano/British pottery found in association with the 'kiln' site to the north, field walking was undertaken.

The field lies over the same glacial sand and gravel deposit as the above mentioned scatter.

Apart from the normal 'general' scatter of post Medieval sherds the following types were identified.

MEDIEVAL WARES.

3 body sherds of 'Leicestershire Sandy ware (grey fabric with pink/buff inner and outer surfaces - gritty fabric).

ROMANO/BRITISH WARES.

3 body sherds of 'Grey Ware'.

1 piece of R/B looking tile?

These R/B pot sherds were found at the N end of the field towards the previously found R/B scatter mentioned above.

FLINT

One possible flint flake showing bulb of percussio

Conclusions: Possibly this represents the edge of the scatter of R/B material to the N.; the field in between (NV 149) has not been available for fieldwalking. The whole area will be kept under surveylance in the future.
